By MR. MUNNIMAKER

The Famous Profit-Wizard of the Standard Classified Advertising Columns.

Speaking of the problems that face the business man who sells only one article of a kind-such as paintings, antique furniture, works of art, etc., etc.,-a problem which is equally important to the individual who has such an article to sell-Mr. Munnimaker, the famous Profit Wizard of the Standard, gave some helpful and interesting hints yesterday to a visitor who called on him for advicee.

Mr. Munnimaker, as everybody in the city knows, is the presiding genius of the busy, enterprising classified want ad columns of the Standard.

"Selling a single article, of which you have no duplicate, and which you can sell to only one customer, is a business problem entirely different from selling an article of which you may have one or two dozen in stock, which can be sold to as many customers as desire it. When you have only one arti- | mous amount of hunting and letter ele of the kind and sell to only one writing, circulars stomer, it is of course important to stamps to find the "most interested"

"If law is of value, if it is inherently right then it matters not by whom it is advanced or opposed, it is right to enforce it, and indeed the question of the rightness of a law lies in its conformity with the spirit which should underlie all law; i. e., does it protect the weak, safeguard the innocent, and make for the general well-being of society Many laws, in fact, all laws at times, seem to conflict with some one's personal liberty. Instance for example our sanitary, our child labor, and our pure food laws So also laws restricting the building of inflammable buildings within the cities' fire limits. In these cases a higher law than that of personal lib erty is in power. Personal ends are supplanted by higher ones his in patriotism. In 1850 when 25,-00 French were encamped at Klosterkamp, a young officer, Chevelier d'Assis, was sent into the near woods o reconnoitre. He was surrounded by the enemy who with drawn bayoets warned him not to give the alarm Instantly personal liberty gave way to higher code and he shouted the alarm. He fell, pierced with many bayonets, but the French were saved. So God and our fellow-men ofttimes call us to a higher standard of right than our personal liberty.

You may say you don't want such a law, t will cause you to give up too much and all that, but it is right and, therefore, it has continued. "It is hard, indeed, to keep any law requires what we loathe to give. This is more acute when we have to do with God for He asks not the keeping of the letter but the spirit as well. Therefore, His first law is not a law of force, but a law of love. We must love Him, His work, His rewards and service or our striving to keep His law is hollow mockery. Do you not see clearly then the great need of all that is implied in 'conversion' ere you can even commence to serve Him?
